

Permaculture Project Aid Worker Course (The Permaculture Research Institute, Zaytuna Farm at The Channon, NSW, Australia)

Starts Mar 19, 2012 and runs for 5 day(s).

This is a five day course, running Monday through Friday, comprising a fifty/fifty mix of the theory and practise of permaculture project establishment with Geoff and Nadia Lawton - specifically designed to give a reference and realistic expectation of the requirements to establish a permaculture project potentially anywhere worldwide, and to give an initial preparation for the same.

To attend this course you must have completed a Permaculture Design Certificate course, somewhere in the world.

Interested students are invited to watch our recent video promo of the work that this training is intended to help facilitate. This can be watched here .

With current world issues of depleting energy supplies, increasing energy demand, population growth and a resulting escalating food and environmental crisis, etc., there is increasing demand for trained, capable workers to fill permaculture spots worldwide - helping with the development of projects, or pioneering new projects.

Positions within projects fall into the following three categories:

1. Project Farm Managers
2. Project Teachers
3. Project Administrators

Such projects provide challenging and rewarding work and experience in far-flung locales, and can be a springboard for a serious, paid career in permaculture, and towards the accreditation of a Permaculture Diploma.

An outline of a generic permaculture project implementation follows:

- Initial analysis and assessment of needs for both local landscape and people.
- Draw up a plan to fulfill these needs, covering the development of: initial earthworks, building design and materials, energy systems, waste systems and agricultural production.
- Each project would incorporate a classroom, accommodation and catering facilities for regional and international students and interns, administration office, soil testing equipment, nursery and tools.
- Each project would have a three-year phased development timescale for completion, culminating in an established working demonstration site and education centre - managed and run by local labour.
- Project students and interns will be monitored by project leaders, with a view to their being offered positions for project replication in new areas.

The course will cover aspects such as:

- How to work with local legal systems to set up non-profit organisations so as to receive funding and sponsorships.
- How to set up local community groups, education systems, farm management systems, administration systems - all the elements needed for a new project.
- Cultural and historic analysis of sites.

We teach as you learn by working with us on real jobs. You will sleep well.

Course Instructors

Geoff Lawton is an internationally-renowned permaculture educator, consultant and practitioner. He emigrated from England to Australia and later studied permaculture with Bill Mollison in Tasmania. He established the Permaculture Research Institute at Tagari Farm in New South Wales, Australia, a 147-acre farmstead previously developed by Mollison. PRI was eventually moved to Zaytuna Farm, in The Channon, where it continues today.

Since 1985, Geoff has designed and implemented permaculture projects in 30 countries for private individuals and groups, communities, governments, aid organizations, and multinational corporations. He has taught the Permaculture Design Certificate course and designed permaculture projects in 30 countries.

Nadia Lawton was born and raised in the Jordan Valley, in one of the lowest and driest places on earth. She completed her PDC with Geoff Lawton in Jordan and went on to complete a Permaculture Diploma in Education and Site Design. She regularly travels with her husband for aid project and permaculture consulting work, and assists in teaching permaculture design courses.

Lesley Byrne is an international permaculture educator and currently co-teaches the Permaculture International Aid Workers Course, Training Teachers Course, and the 10 week internship with Geoff Lawton at PRI Australia. With an extensive academic background, including two graduate degrees in international education, environmental history and multicultural societies in the Caribbean and Latin America; Lesley brings a wealth of experience of teaching at both the university and lower grade levels both abroad and in the U.S.

Lesley completed her PDC in Jordan with Geoff and Nadia Lawton. Currently, Lesley is based between the U.S., Australia, Jordan, and Afghanistan. Since 2005, she has been directly involved with permaculture aid development and designing and installing educational school gardens with an emphasis on permaculture, sustainability, community outreach workshops for widows, orphans and girls. Ms. Byrne is the founder and executive director of Kids Are Sweet International, a U.S. nonprofit, whose mission is to help the most impoverished families and children in rural areas of the world, with a specific emphasis on permaculture and sustainable development.
